From The New-Yorker. Letters from the Mediterranean.

BY AN AMERICAN LADY.

No. XL.....Monocco, 1841 I WENT to call on one of my Moorish acquaintances a day or two since, and found the door fastened from the outside by an enormous padlock. Supposing the family all from home, I turned away for a long walk in the country, and in an hour had forgotten the circumstance. On my return, as I was passing the door, an old crone, who acts as an out-door servant, stopped me with an invitation to enter, and with a very little, had Spaceab and a great abundance of gesture. tives of the good lasty, had been asserabled to look at me as a foreign curiosity. The next day I was not expected, and a foreign curiosity. The next day I was not expected, and the tender husband, in the plenitude of his care, had locked up his wife for the day and was leaving the street when he saw me go to the door. He turned back to open it for me, but I was already round the corner on my way to the fields. The acquaintance of a Christian in itself he would be perfeetly willing to dispense with; but the well-bred Moslem was fearful it would be considered a breach of politeness to close his door when a stranger was in the least degree within the bounds of an invitation. He had therefore taken every step he could think of to remove the bad impression.

The old woman who lives near was summoned to attend his wife, that she might not be alone when the door was unlocked, and the young Swiss was called in to help watch for me and serve as the medium of explanation. "But why does Ben Ali compel his wife to remain alone?" I inquired; "at all events she might have a companion." The child said Ben Ali was not rich enough to support a servant, or poor relation, as many others do. "He is not very poor, though," she added, "for his wife never goes out." "That must be a great happiness, certainly, but what can she find to occupy herself about?" The Swiss could not answer the question, and explained to the Morisca, who was equally unable to reply. "It was her fate to be locked up alone while her husband was out," she said, "and as for occupation, she seemed to think it rather an enviable privilege to be exempted from the necessity of exertion." Many of the Moorish women spin the woolen and cetton yarn of which their haigues women spin the woolen and cotton yarn of which their buildness are made, but she was not obliged to spin. "Do you rend sometimes?" I asked. "I am not a priest," was the reply.

doors fastened when they are from home, but usually the wife is not entirely alone. If there are no children or servants, some elderly female relative lives with them as the companion and guard of the wife. A shadow of this custem existed until lately in Spain in the indispensable Duenna who never left the presence of her Senora; but the Duenna went of fashion with their national costume, and like the Masser. out of fashion with their national costume, and like the Mas-todon has left but few relies to sustain the tradition of their existence. The poorer class of Moorish woman have, from necessity, more liberty than the rich, as they are obliged to buy provisions for their families, bring water from the fountains, and attend to all the domestic arrangements that with the others devolve on the servants. As in the rest of the world poverty, when it stops short of absolute pinching want, is here more smiling and contented than wealth. The most sprightly, light-hearted persons I have seen in Morocco. were two women, both wives of one man, one about thir-ty, the other something older, who were collecting and carrying to their mutual lord brush and reeds to mend the gaps in the hedge of his garden. The Moor was a stout florid personage, with a merry, twinkling eye, and had altogether air of a bon vivant than of an abstemious, hard working Moslem. In fact he seemed to perform his part of the labor with exceeding moderation. When the materials of his work were brought, he would place in the hedge one stick after the other as his attentive wives handed them with the utmost deliberation, talking good-humoredly all the while to the women, and to us, after we juited them. He certainly deserved some credit for the excellent harmony be preserved in his family, and the more as his youngest wife appeared really fond of him; the other seemed rather isdifferent: 10% to himself, he was the flower of impartiality.

We went through the garden. The peas and beans were nearly fit for the table, and he had radishes, onions, and other regetables already in profusion. The peach trees and grape vines gave promise of abundance, but the orange trees were thinly decked with their fragrant blossoms. A rustic summer-house was so densely covered with a species of myrtle as to be impervious to the rain. It was furnished as much and as well as Moorish houses generally are; that is, it had an earthen stew-pan, in which their food was cooked, and out of which it was eaten: a dish is perfectly explerive, and six Moorish houses out of seven don't own one.— A rush mat or two was rolled up, and back of it was the third treasure of the mansion—a sort of cradle. The sight of this depository of domestic felicity induced me to inquire about the children. "We have none," was the reply. "We have had five, but they all died young." Children are al-ways spoken of as the common stock of the family. Whether the real mother or not, any or all of the wives speak of them as ours. So in this case. I found that neither of the women I was talking with ever had any children—our five that are sleeping having been the children of a previous wife who was dead. "So your husband has made three marriages," I remarked. The younger one laughed and said she was his fifth wife. "Where are the other three?" The elder woman hesitated, and after exchanging a few words with the other in an under tone, answered that two were dead and one divorced. The lord was more than fifty and less than sixty, and that was all she knew about his age.— He did not look more than forty, and met the cares of life with the gayety of youth. Blessed with such a temperament he could never grow old-it is an endowment equivalent to perpetual youth. The wives were about to go after another load of faggots, while their happy lord prepared his pipe to The wives were about to go after another smoke away the time of their absence, and we prepared to continue our ramble.

Befere we parted I learned farther that this garden, about three acres in extent, containing many fruit trees and vines, and an excellent well, was hired at the rate of a dollar a month by our good-natured, independent friend, who was not, as we at first supposed, the actual proprietor. A relation left him three of the diminutive donkers of the country -his creditors seized one, and unother he was obliged to sell to buy food for the last. Upon the strength of this capital of one borrico, worth perhaps four dollars, and two wives, worth—nothing at all—he had hired the garden or field he was now tilling, and regarded himself as a presper-You may be a Bashaw yet," I observed to him. "Please God," he said, in a tone that showed he thought the office and himself sufficiently suited to each other to render the event possible. In the interim his worldly estate of two wives and one borrico filled the measure of his content. It would be hard to find happiness on cheaper terms any where. It is impossible to stimulate these people to enterprise; they are troubled with but a short catalogue of wants-so after all, the balance of cares and enjoyments finds its level. With them each scale is lightly charged and seldom trembles with the excitement of change. With us they are filled to overflowing and are in constant move-ment, with the fluctuations of ambitious hopes and anxieties. They would sink under the load, if called to the responsibil-ities of energetic action. You would die of enaut if forced into their state of helpless stagnation-for both, Heaven "tempers the wind to the shorn lamb."

After visiting the Jewish burial ground, and observing the similarity in the form of their grave-stones, (which are laid on a level with the ground and covered with Hebrew inscriptions,) to the sarcophagi of the Egyptians, being like the rounded at the head and foot, and tapering away at the body, we descended a steep path that had once been a paved road, to a delightful spring, hidden away in the green re-cesses of a deep valley. The seclusion, the deep repose, broken only by the murmuring gush of the fountain, and the balmy softness of the air, made the place a fit residence for a world-renouncing hermit, and I was not surprised to hear the devotion of such a being had hallowed the ground to Moslem superstition. No one then with me could give me, with any distinctness, the tradition of this lone spot, though it was evident it had been rendered accessible with great labor. While we were quietly seated on the fragments of a ruined building, admiring the wild and peculiar character of the scene, we were surprised to hear voices near us. Before we could | m17.4

determine whence they proceeded, the speakers turned the angle of a rugged part of the mountain, and the loving brace of wives we had left half a mile from there three hours before, suddenly joined us. They were as lively and good-hemored as ever, and carried along their load of sticks with the glee of children at play. Finding ourselves invaded in this sylvan retirement, we proceeded to clamber up the hill, on our way home, followed by our persevering friends the some, I turned away for a long wans.

"If she offended him, what then? did he make his servants chastise her. like a Sultan?" I assured her that was even more out of the question, but that probably a look or word of disapprobation might inflict a more severe and lasting pain on a Christian lady than a blow would on her. Absolutely destitute of resource in the way of employment, and cut off from the gossip of servants or neighbors, and as I am convinced from certain observations, not attached to her husband, she rather vegetates than lives—yet she is content, and because they were esteemed because they could be beaten, and because they were esteemed they were imprissoned as closely as their husband could afford to maintain them. All this was quite fair and legical, and it would be its situation.

IMPORTANT HINDS ON THE MANAGEMENT OF TEETH.
The Teeth, though the hardest animal substance, yield soonest to treatment, good or bad. They are easily specified, and by judicious treatment easily preserved. It is no vain boast of the skilful Dentist, that diseases of the Teeth are ordinarily subject to his con rol; indeed it may be regarded as settled in the public mind, that judicious treatment secure, their permanence. The Teeth, composed subtantially of lime, are of course easily decomposed by acids; and oxygen being the base of acids, we are led to two important facts in the preservation of the Teeth.

Ist. Kaep acids out of the mouth, and every thing out of the stemach that generates acids there, and your health and Teeth are comparatively safe.

2d. Keep every thing out of the mouth that attracts oxygen, and this for three reasons:

1st. Oxygen being the base of acids, renders the secretion of the mouth doubly acrid, and thus the destruction of the Teeth is health is put in jeopardy.

3d. Galyanic action is produced, and by this, both the nerver and teeth suffer. These hints, if duly regarded, will lead to the following

Ist. No acids will ever be used for cleansing the Teeth. All tooth powders should contain a moderate alkali.

2d. All operators on the Teeth, who use mineral pastes or fusible metals, all of which are composed of metals having strong affinity for oxygen, should be shanned; their boasted remedies are far worse than the disease they promise to cure.

3d. All combinations of metals, such as Tin, Gold, Silver, Platins, &c., should be carefully avoided. The purest metals differ in affinity for exygen, and of course produce galvanic action when put together in the same mouth. Fine Gold is the only metal that should ever find a lodgmest in the human mouth, and to this conclusion every scientific Dentist must inevitably come.

No Dentist can consistently oppose the use of an amalgam of mercury and silver, whilst he is humself in the hist—as is at present almost every Bentist in the Union—of using amalgam of Platina, Gold, Silver, Copper and Zinc, under the name of "Gold Plates." Fine Gold, and Fine Gold alone for Dental operations, must soon become an axiom.

PHALON'S

CELEBRATED ANTI-DANDRIFF.

No ONE should be without a bottle of Phalon's Anti-Dandriff—it is without exception the best remady ever yet employed for utterly the reducating with one wash, the dandriff completely from the head. The proprietor of this celebrated Wash, unlike some individuals, will not guarantee that it will turn g-2f 'iir black or make baid heads hairy, but he will give $100 to that person who will say that it is not the article he recommends it to be, viz: a thorough cleaner of the surface and HAIR of the head. Its qualities are peculiar. It not only cleaness and purifies the Hair, but leaves a glossy and silky appearance unlike all other remadies of the sort-ever yet offered to the Public. It leaves, after its application, the most exhilerating and cooling sensation, and its effect for LADIES and CHILDREN's heads is unrivaled. Gentlemen will find this compound a great preventive to Baldness, for by keeping the roots of the Hair and poges of the hoad perfectly free from dandriff, it promotes and strengthens the growth of the Hair. All persons travelling South, or living in a warm climate, should never he without it as its qualities for a Soulhern climate are altogether unequalled. Those who may be sceptical as to the qualities of my invaluable Wash I here invite to purchase one bottle, and if not found to be exactly as I warra viit to be, I will return them the cash if used according to direction.

Price 50 and 75 cents per bottle, or gentlemen can have it applied for 25 cents, and to be parchased of any basher in New-York. Observe, mone is genuine unless signed by ine in mk.

CONFECTIONERY.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his customers and others. I that he has removed from Williamstreet, to the store formerly occupied by Mr. Charles Lee, the celebrated Blacking Manufacturer, No. 255 Broadway, between Warren and Chambers-streets, opposite the City Hall, where he will continue to manufacture DRY CONFECTIONS of the purest kind, and warranted to keep in all climates. Although the exponses attendant on so large an establishment and in so public a situation, must necessarily be greatly increased, yet the additional facilities afforded him in the manufacturing and sales department, both of which being under his manufacturing and sales department, both of which being under his manufacturing and sales department, both of which being under his manufacturing and sales department, both of which being under his manufacturing so doing, to merit a slare of the public favor. It may not be improper to say that the subscriber is a practical workman, and has been engaged in the manufacturing of Confections for upwards of 16 years, which he flatters himself entities him to a favorable notice.

BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT,

JOSEPH GILLOTT,

PEN MANUFACTURER TO THE QUEEN.

CAUTION.—The high character of these Pens has induced the attempt, on the part of several disreputable makers, to practice a fraud, not only upon Mr. Gillott, but also upon the public. An inferior article bearing the misspelled name, thus, Gillot, omitting the final r, is now in the market. It can readily be detected by its unfinished appearance, and the very common style in which it is putup.

Observe, the genuine Pensare all marked in full—"Jaseph Gillott's Patent," or, "Juseph Gillott, warranted," and that each gross bears a face simile of his signature.
